We would like to invite you to take part in a research study

Understanding grief following stillbirth

Stillbirth is a difficult experience, and we believe that grief following stillbirth can be more difficult for some women than others. This research study aims to identify the factors that may lead to an increased risk of developing long-standing or complicated grief following a stillbirth. We hope this will improve our ability to predict which women will need more support after their loss, so that we can enhance the support available to women in the future.

Who can take part in the study?
Women who have experienced a stillbirth at 24 weeks of pregnancy or later, up to 2 years ago, can take part in the study.

What will it involve?
If you decide to take part, it will involve answering a series of questions about your feelings, thoughts, and experiences related to having a stillbirth.

For further information and to take part online, please visit:
http://oxfordperinatal.squarespace.com/grief

Alternatively, please contact the researcher, Helen Crispus Jones, for further information using the contact details below.

Helen Crispus Jones, Trainee Clinical Psychologist
Oxford Doctoral Course in Clinical Psychology
Isis Education Centre
Warneford Hospital
Oxford, OX3 7JX
Email: helen.crispusjones@hmc.ox.ac.uk